

Long-Term Care Facilities Litigation

The aging U.S. population is necessitating a growing number of independent living, assisted living and skilled nursing facilities. These long-term care facilities are fertile ground for personal injury lawsuits and wrongful death litigation. Certainly, facility residents have significant medical needs ? unfortunately, they sometimes get injured, deteriorate mentally and physically, and eventually die despite receiving appropriate care from their health care providers. These end-of-life events often provide the ?damages? sought by plaintiffs? attorneys in their quest for large verdicts against long-term care facilities.

Reducing Liability and Defending Long-Term Care Facilities

Our Long-Term Care Litigation Team is experienced in helping assisted living facilities, nursing homes and skilled nursing facilities reduce and manage liability and, as necessary, defend claims of negligent care and treatment. Williams Mullen offers risk management services in the form of ongoing facility evaluations, as well as staff and documentation practices. Additionally, our nursing home lawyers can provide training to help caregivers understand and focus on liability issues.

Should the situation arise where litigation is likely to occur, our skilled attorneys can conduct timely and proper investigation and evidence gathering. If litigation is unavoidable, we are adept at aggressively defending our clients.

Williams Mullen?s Team Understands Long-Term Care Law

Members of our Long-Term Care Team have defended numerous long-term care owners and operators in matters ranging from shareholder and insurance coverage disputes to malpractice claims. We have handled long-term care facility lawsuits in numerous state and federal courts. Team members are familiar with the judges who hear the cases and the juries that decide them. Additionally, depending on the circumstances and the client?s wishes, we are experienced in resolving cases prior to trial on terms favorable to our clients.
